Abstract

This record is the image-bearing manifestation of Lee Sharks's poem if your heart should ever slowly turn. Its deposited body contains a single externally hosted PNG reference rather than extracted verse. The absence of body text is therefore not evidence of an empty or failed deposit: the image is the primary artifact in this manifestation.

The poem's complete textual manifestation appears separately as record #734. The two records should be related as parallel expressions of one work rather than collapsed as duplicates. #733 preserves the visual presentation; #734 supplies searchable, accessible, and citation-ready text. Because the frozen repository body exposes only the image URL, no description should invent typography, color, composition, or other visual particulars not visible in the source text. The authority record should identify the image as complete in its own medium while using the companion record to restore accessibility and retrieval.
